Six lawyers were named Leaders of Tomorrow out of a group of 18 finalists in six categories at a gala organized by the Young Bar Association of Montreal last night.

The winners – chosen by a jury headed by François Rolland, chief justice of Quebec Superior Court, and made up of top members of the Quebec legal establishment -- are:

Corporate law

Thierry Lavigne Martel, partner at Martel, Cantin who specializes in advising small- and medium-size Quebec businesses.

Family law

Myriam Farag, a family law specialist formerly with O'Hanlon, Sanders, Teixeira and Maria R.Battaglia, avocats who now manages the content of more than 300 legal information files produced by Éducaloi, a non-profit organization that promotes access to justice by providing easy-to-understand information about the law.

In-house counsel

Adina Comanita, director of the legal department at Landmark Properties Inc., a real estate management company that oversees commercial properties across Canada.

Pro Bono

Paul St-Pierre Plamondon lawyer with Delegatus services juridiques inc. who co-founded Génération d'idées, an independent, non-partisan and non-profit thought group focused on the future of young people in Quebec.

Criminal law

Julie Provost, a lawyer with Montreal municipal court responsible for the implementation and co-ordination of a pilot project – a first in Quebec – to accompany people with mental health issues appearing before the court and look out for their interests.

Civil and commercial litigation

Ponora Ang, a lawyer with McMillan LLP who has worked on big litigation files, the ongoing Castor Holdings case before Quebec Superior Court and plaintiffs in the challenge of a proposed plan of arrangement for BCE Inc. that went before the Supreme Court of Canada.
